Doctrinal Formation

We should hear the Gospel as if Our Lord were present and speaking to us. We must not say 'happy were those who could see Him' for many of those who saw Him crucified Him; and many of those who have not seen Him have believed in Him. The very words that came from Our Lord's lips were written down and kept and preserved for us. We can only love someone we know. Meditating on the Gospels teaches us to see Jesus as the Apostles saw Him, to observe His reactions, to watch the way He behaved and listen to His words which were always filled with wisdom and authority. On some occasions we see Him moved with compassion at the plight of people in misery. At other times we see Him full of understanding for sinners, or firm with the Pharisees who are presenting a false image of their religion. He is full of patience with those disciples who so often do not grasp the meaning of His words. We must never be satisfied with the amount of knowledge about Jesus Christ and His teaching that we have so far acquired. Love always seeks to know the beloved better. The quality of the instrument – for that is what we all are, instruments in God's hands – can improve, it can develop new possibilities. If we are constantly receiving good doctrine, we will find that we have been amassing a great interior richness that little by little we will be able to incorporate into our lives.
